As an Organizational Psychologist and Executive Coach, I help teams and individuals to utilize their full potential in order to reach their personal, team, and organizational goals. My focus areas are in solving conflict within groups and organizations and helping executives to become authentic leaders.

In my earlier professional career, I was an organization learning consultant in a Human Capital Consultancy Firm affiliated with the American Management Association, where I helped executives and middle managers enhance their leadership skills and translating clients' business needs into learning solutions.

In addition, I worked as a psychologist at the Bangkok Refugee Center, a United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR)'s Implementing Partner, where I conducted psychological assessments, provided counseling, and helped clients to attain self-knowledge. This encompassed developing and implementing psychological support programs funded by UNHCR that increased overall psychological well-being of refugees from over 20 countries.

Academically, I am interested in discovering and understanding how an organization can help their employees find engagement and happiness at work, which in turn maximizes their work quality. My Master's Degree research was on Optimal Experience (FLOW) at Work.

I have been trained internationally as a coach by Leadership That Works (USA) in the International Coach Federation (ICF) Accredited Coaching Training Program (ACTP). I am also trained in Process Oriented Psychology (a psychology model which has wide applications in the area of individual therapy and group conflicts within organizations) and Satir Transformational Systemic Therapy, a psychotherapy model that helps clients become aware of their inner world, including beliefs, rules, feelings, expectations, and ways of coping with various situations. Thus, the clients have the freedom of managing their internal world and responding to others in their environments in more constructive ways.
